In this, Gospel members of Jesus' family think he is out of his mind and religious authorities accuse him of being possessed by the devil. This is not the first time Mark reports that Jesus meets rejection (see Mark 2:7, 16, 18, 24); there is growing hostility to him because he does not conform to what people expect of him and his disciples. This represents a closed attitude toward the Good News embodied by Jesus. Resistance to his person is designed to discredit him and anyone who identifies with him – which says a lot about the community that Mark is evangelizing and leading to maturity.

The only argument that the scribes have against Jesus is their own authority, a typical attitude of someone who feels threatened. The family wants to protect him, but in reality, what is important for them is what the people might be saying about them. Jesus' argument to the scribes consists of showing them the absurdity of their reasoning. Jesus uses the occasion of his family's attempt at intervention to redefine the real family of God. He invites his hearers to become a part of that family, the basis of which is an intimate friendship with God and obedience to his will.

Two halves of the family's visit frame the Beelzebub controversy. Their failure to accept him is akin to the scribes' hostility. As the story progresses Jesus becomes increasingly more isolated as he moves steadily closer to home and on group after another deserts him. The present controversy demonstrates the intense hostility from the religious officials (see also 1:22; 2:6), who are "from Jerusalem," a clear indicator of the distinction between Galilee and Jerusalem. (Jerusalem will be the seat of hostility and place of execution.)

The matter in question is Jesus' authority; and the scribes accuse him of using demonic power to cast out demons. Jesus replies in parables based on one principle: a power that battles against itself is bound to collapse. By implication, Satan's kingdom is still operative, so Jesus' power must have another source. In the saying, "No one can enter a strong man's house to plunder his property unless he first ties up the strong man," Satan is the strong homeowner who has been bound and whose property Jesus is plundering, throw of Satan's power. The saying about the forgiveness of sins reverts to the issue of Jesus' authority: all sins are forgivable, except blasphemy against the Holy Spirit is a denial of Jesus' power in the exorcisms, so the implication is that Jesus expels demons by the power of the Holy Spirit (as we see also in 1:12-13). Refusal to accept this is the unforgivable sin. To the news of the arrival of his family. Jesus responds by showing that not family ties but doing God's will is decisive in the Kingdom.
